PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

I got a surprise! After a pre-dawn walk along a ridge, and an hours long observation for potential venison, I hiked over the ridge and dropped down to the truck next to the creek. There I found a young man and his dad pursuing native rainbows. A Tenkara rod and short line wielded by the older was the tool of choice, and several typical small fish (and one not-so typical larger specimen) made them both very happy, as the younger gambled about over the rocks, " instructing" his father where to place the next bow-n-arrow cast.

His delight in the experience reminded me of my sons, decades ago, crawling along Cedar "Crik", with the tip sections of defunct rods, attached to a yard of old running line and some leader, with various terrestrial or attractor flies on the end. They learned to slow down, stay low, use cover, read water and have fun. And they caught fish.

Looking forward to this month, I encourage you all to have some fun as well. We have some prospective new members, who could benefit with some inspiration from the group to try new experiences. I look forward to seeing more of you all. Let's go fishing.

Bruce

FLY TYING AT THE LIBRARY

Near Nuff Scuplin

The Near Nuff was developed by legendary fly tier Dave Whitlock. It was developed to as a quick tye compared to his more life-like pattern the matuka scuplin. The matuka scuplin can takes several hours to tye by less experienced tyers. The Near Nuff is definitely a successful pattern because it's been around for a long, long time! I have used this pattern with good result for trout and smallmouth bass. It has been used

We will be tying this pattern on November 16 at the Weiser Library during the clubs month tying session. Bring your vise, thread, and basic tools. All other materials will be provided.

Oregon lifts limits, calls on anglers to catch fish in reservoir before winter kills them

ONTARIO, Ore. – Wildlife biologists are concerned that conditions at an Oregon reservoir will kill fish this winter - so they invite you to beat Mother Nature to the punch.

The Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife has lifted all size limits, daily limits and gear limits for all species of fish in Malheur Reservoir, starting Monday. (Release of October 11)

Guess who at Balm Creek Res.

October 3, 2021

Al and Jeanette went camping at Unity Reservoir State Park. Despite the very low water, cooler weather and the usual winds Al had three days of good fishing. Water temperature was 54 degrees. Caught Rainbow, Small and Large Mouth Bass and Crappie.
